

Jacob Korenblum

Mr. Jacob Korenblum is a co-founder and president of Souktel Inc., the Middle East's first service that uses cell phone technology to connect job-seekers with employers. He holds an Ed.M. from Harvard University, where he also served as a Harvard Reynolds Foundation Fellow in Social Enterprise. A fluent speaker of Arabic, Mr. Korenblum has worked in the employment and emergency aid sectors in Palestine, Morocco, Egypt and Jordan--as well as East and West Africa. His work as a Souktel co-founder has been profiled by CNBC, the New York Times, Reuters, the UK's Guardian newspaper, and Canada's leading daily, the National Post. Most recently, Mr. Korenblum has facilitated workshops and made presentations at the US State Department (2011), The World Bank Human Development Forum (2011), The Clinton Global Initiative meeting (2010), and the Tech Awards (2010).